

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A scanning microscope, having a detector, arranged in a detection beam path, for receiving detection light proceeding from a sample, has between the sample and the detector an optical shutter means with which the detection beam path can be blocked. A control means for controlling the shutter means is provided. The detection light beam path can be blocked automatically outside the scanning operation and in the event of an excessive detection light power level.